1960s Trend Setter

This 3-bedroom brick and weatherboard treasure is believed to be the first concrete floor home in Te Awamutu. Built in the 1960s, when the architects of the day were influenced by the "New Zealand, Pacific style". This honey demonstrates this well with the lower pitch roof, the large glazed areas and the open plan living - a new thing at the time.

The idea that, form should follow function, has been kept with the lovely renovation of the kitchen by the current owners.

You will enjoy the neutral colour tones, tasteful curtains and the spacious feel of this home. The fully fenced section is completed with the double garage and ample off-street parking.
